

Guiliano to lead new Chromalloy asset management business

February 29, 2016

US firm Chromalloy has appointed Jim Guiliano to lead its newly formed asset management services division.

Chromalloy said the new unit will encompass its existing material solutions business while adding new services including an investment and trading platform, pooling and leasing options and commercial and technical advisory services.

Before joining Chromalloy, Guiliano was the executive vice-president of International Aero Engines.

He has also held senior roles within Pratt & Whitney, including vice-president of global customer service and service programmes and vice-president of the engine manufacturer's maintenance organization.